Helping Homeless Adults Rebuild their Lives

FROM THE STREETS TO RECOVERY

Many homeless have been abused and mistreated. As a result, they are often frightened, confused and reluctant to accept services. The MCHOME program model follows a 'whatever it takes' approach to moving people off the streets. Staff first works on establishing trust while encouraging clients to accept shelter. Safety in shelter creates a strong foundation for a successful long-term transition to treatment and, if successful, housing. For the community, client success translates into fewer homeless people living on the streets, as well as cost savings from a reduction in local jail and hospital stays.

Once trust is established, clients are evaluated for a psychiatric disability. If they qualify, and are willing to work with MCHOME staff, they are then enrolled in intensive integrated services, which include, food, assistance with housing or housing search, connection to mental health and primary care, assistance with identification, and help in obtaining income through work or public benefits.

Homeless individuals who do not qualify for MCHOME's or Interim's other services are referred to other appropriate service providers.
